STRAIGHT TALK

The opening outbreak of the great unwashed in this state occurred Tuesday evening, when what was described by the papers as a spirited contest for delegates to the Democratic state convention took place between those who are supporting Spinach Wallace and Jamesy ("Black Michael") Moyle, for national committeeman.

Maybe the gentle way is to say that the fight was spirited, but a battle between a cluster of bulldozers and wildcats had nothing on it. The battle between Moyle and his adherents and the few who are in Spinach Wallace's corner has been going on for months, with nasty remarks being passed back and forth, including ugly inferences and criminations and recriminations. Never in the history of the country were the Democrats accidentally successful that the various factions in the different states did not begin fighting soon after, and the present scrap is only a repetition of what has transpired before. The truth of the matter is that neither one of them is fit to be national committeeman, there isn't a chance for either one to harmonize the party, they are both exceedingly unpopular and justly so, and no matter who is chosen for the place the fight will go merrily on to the advantage of the Republican party.

The battle at Bingham in the eighty-first district was to have been expected, and in all probability delegates F. W. Quinn, D. G. Wood, J. G. Green, Daniel Fitzgerald, T. B. Stevens, G. G. Scheip and W. E. Collins will be seated. However, the fight of the Bingham delegates promises to be one of the snappiest contests in the convention.

The only people surprised at the ambition of Spinach Wallace to succeed himself as national committeeman are those who are not familiar with his supreme nerve. After disrupting the party as he has done and making a record for political double-crossing seldom achieved by anyone in a similar position in the state, we do not see how he can hope to succeed himself if the rank and file of the party and those who have worked hardest for its success are alive to the situation.

However, we should think he would be just as acceptable to them as this man Moyle, who is still sore over his defeat for the senatorship and has overlooked no opportunity to whine about it since the November election. Neither one of them is a game politician; neither one has any license to be a state leader in his party, and if either one is elected it will be to the great detriment of the party, which is perfectly satisfactory to the opposition.

Even in the Democracy there are some big men, and to set them aside in order to honor Wallace or Moyle is hardly less than an insult to those who are qualified to be real leaders, even of a forlorn hope.

The developments in the county administration this week merely add to the comedy of the situation mingled with the disgust of citizens, over the petty squabbles of the officials and their clerks, and the inefficiency and lack of dignity displayed by those who were elected by accident.

Nine months more will finish their political careers for all time, and during that period there is nothing for the taxpayers to do but grin and bear it and register an emphatic protest next November.
